Cover Story

3 Vintage Chicks

by Barb Stillman, Publisher

The photo on the front cover was taken at 3 Vintage Chicks in Northeast Phoenix just before a recent monthly Chicks Night Out event. Although the shop is open seven days a week, Owners Sue and Tom Nadeau, along with a design team of 40 talented vendors, find time to transform the store for each uniquely themed event held on the second Friday of each month.

The new theme is chosen and announced after the most recent event is over, and Sue and the other artists/vendors spend the next few weeks searching, creating and gathering items to make their spaces a treasure trove for shoppers. These monthly events are free and feature food, beverages, shopping and fun. This popular destination event is a gathering place for girl friends, couples and anyone looking for an enjoyable night out.

As I browsed the aisles and spaces all ready and prepared for that evening’s shoppers, I met a few “early bird” shoppers. One told me, “This shop is my peaceful place and I come regularly when I need to relax and be inspired.” It doesn’t get any better than that.

I was impressed with the detail that Sue brings to each corner of the store. We talked about what is currently “in” and what customers look for. She is very passionate about her business and works tirelessly to make 3 Vintage Chicks a success for the shop “creatives” as well as keeping it fresh and enticing for shoppers. The shop carries CeCe Caldwell Chalk and Natural Clay Paints and upcoming workshops are planned, including a surprise class with creator CeCe Caldwell. This product is fun and easy to use and Sue is happy to help you get started.

Because the shop is open daily you don’t have to wait until...
If you are a junker or re-purposer, you have no doubt seen benches made from chairs. They have been around for years. I have made a number of these and they have all been fun and very different from each other.

You can use two or three chairs. They can be matching or all different. You may choose to paint them all one color or use many colors. The seat is plywood and can also be painted or upholstered, using any durable fabric. I have used upholstery fabric, burlap, blankets and vintage quilts. Your bench can be as plain or as fancy as you want to make it.

For this particular bench, I used two matching chairs. I removed the seats and cut a piece of plywood the correct size to go over both with about a half inch overhang. I lightly sanded, primed and painted the chairs green and white. It took three coats of paint before I was happy with the finish. Since these chairs were a little plain, I wanted to add an embellishment. I cut six flowers out of thin plywood, painted, glued and nailed them to the chairs. I chose an old quilt for the seat covering. I cut it the size of the seat plus three inches all the way around. I laid the plywood on the back side of the quilt and used a staple gun to attach it to the plywood. I screwed the seat to the chairs and it was done!!

This bench will be a great addition to the front porch when spring weather finally gets here.

the next monthly event to enjoy 3 Vintage Chicks. They carry among the best values in vintage, upcycled, rustic and salvaged furniture, home décor, clothing, jewelry, soaps and lotions. The vendors are artists, upcyclers, pickers and DIYers who fill the 7,000 square foot store with home furnishings and décor for every style, offering creative solutions for your decorating challenges. With a friendly welcome, they are ready to help you make your home a showcase. 3 Vintage Chicks was voted Best Vintage Shop of the Valley from Phoenix Magazine 2015 and 2017.

Sue has always had a “crafty” flair for decorating and painting furniture. She was a vendor at another vintage location in Phoenix before opening her own shop with two of her friends, thus the name 3 Vintage Chicks. With full-time jobs and children, two of the “Chicks” left to spend more time with their families and Sue and Tom became the sole owners and decided to keep the name.

Originally from Boston, MA, Sue graduated from college with a retail management degree. She and Tom owned a retail clothing business in Boston’s famous Faneuil Hall for 12 years before moving to Arizona 19 years ago to be closer to family.

The theme for the next monthly event on May 11, from 5 to 9 p.m., will be “Cabin Life” so make your plans to go and be inspired to make your cabin, camper, trailer or pop-up tent decorating dreams come true.

3 Vintage Chicks is located at 13012 N Cave Creek Road in Phoenix. For more information, visit www.3vintagechicks.com or follow them on Facebook or Instagram and stay updated on their monthly events.

Puzzles - Piecing Together the Pieces

by Jay Mark

It’s puzzling that no statue of John Spilsbury (1739-1769) exists. There are no memorials to a man we both love and hate. The sad fact is that his name has been mostly forgotten. And yet more than 250 years later, by devoting countless hours to an inane exercise for which the only outcome is the satisfaction of a completed assembly, we are still paying homage to his ingenuity. I doubt whether there is a single individual in the civilized world who has not at some time or other cursed Spilsbury for the often frustrating hours his invention has imposed upon them.

Back in the 18th century, the young Londoner apprenticed to Thomas Jeffreys, King George III’s Royal Geographer and learned cartography and engraving. Around 1766, Spilsbury came up with a novel idea for a new teaching tool—not a game—that would forever change the world.

By the 18th century— with improvements in travel and ships regularly crossing the seas to other lands— geography had become a critical subject in schools. Students studied colorful hand-tinted maps learning about the bigger world in which they lived. In 1766, in attempt to improve learning, Spilsbury took one of his maps — “Europe divided into Kingdoms, etc.” — and pasted it onto a wooden block. What he did next would lead to centuries of exasperation.

Taking a delicate marquetry saw, used for cutting small pieces of wood for inlay, he proceeded to “dissect” the map into dozens of individual shapes of the countries. Students could then piece them together into a completed map. And maybe along the way retain more about the geography of our planet. Teachers loved Spilsbury’s “Dissected Maps” as an engaging teaching tool.

His invention made John Spilsbury the father of the modern “jigsaw” puzzle—although it would be another 142 years before it took that name. In the beginning, the earliest puzzles were still the “Dissected Maps.” Each was quite expensive, carefully cut by hand and packaged in fine wooden boxes with un-illustrated engraved labels.

Following his premature death in 1769, John’s wife Sarah May continued the expanding business. It wasn’t long before about 20 competitors had entered this new enterprise. But the industry grew slowly.

The introduction of the mechanized fret saw in 1855 was the start of a revolution. Somewhere between 1870 to 1875, Jig Saw, the term for a cutting tool, entered the lexicon. Meanwhile, chromolithography brought down the cost of color printing.

If John Spilsbury gets credit for inventing the jigsaw puzzle, then Milton Bradley should be recognized for turning the teaching tool into an addictive amusement.

In 1880, Bradley took a colorful lithograph of a wrecked train engine, put it on the cover of a cardboard box and called it the “Smashed Up Locomotive.” Inside the box was an illustration of an undamaged engine pasted to a wooden backing that had been cut with a mechanical saw into individual pieces.

Slowly the term “dissected” was replaced by words like “mechanical puzzle,” “picture puzzle” and, finally in 1906, “jigsaw” became the most enduring descriptive

For the jigsaw puzzle to evolve into a national pastime, the cost of manufacture had to be reduced. In 1908 a 500-piece, hand cut wooden puzzle could cost a sky-high $5. That translates into about $141 in today’s value.

By the 1930s, wooden puzzles began to be supplanted by the mass production of cardboard backed designs that could be easily die-cut into individual shapes in a powerful hydraulic press, thereby allowing for a more affordable and complex product. About this time interlocking pieces were introduced greatly stabilizing the puzzles that previously would too easily disassemble.

In the beginning, puzzle solvers had to work on their own. It wasn’t until well into the 20th century that the puzzle began to be illustrated on the box cover—thereby aiding in construction.

One of the most popular features of wooden puzzles was the interspersing of figural pieces into the puzzle—animals, humans and other shapes. These are the puzzles that are most highly prized by collectors today.

The earliest wooden puzzles can run into the hundreds of dollars. Later puzzles are found at prices starting around a more affordable $20. Some manufacturers are more desired than others. When searching for puzzles, look for ones made by companies such as Milton Bradley & Company, Parker Brothers and their expensive Pastime Puzzles line, The McLoughlin Brothers, The Par Company, Tuck’s Zig-Zaw Picture Puzzles, Kleen Kut Zig Zaw Puzzles, and Falls Puzzles that introduced a falling girl signature piece into each puzzle.

It’s ironic that, in this age of technology and electronic diversions, we can still be confounded, confused and conflicted by being confronted with the challenge of simply assembling a picture from its connective pieces. So next time you find yourself in a jigsaw puzzle purgatory, plagued with painful paroxysms, perplexed and perturbed by problematic puzzle pieces, proffer praise, or pain, to John Spilsbury.

“What do we do with mom and dad’s old stuff?” asks the younger generation. It seems that vintage chic is out of vogue and Crate and Barrel, IKEA, Target and other look-alike furniture is where decorating takes place. Does it matter?

“In happy and long-lived cultures, people often display items from their families’ past,” says The Blue Zones of Happiness author Dan Buettner. “We find that in happier cultures around the world, folks feel like part of a continuum.”

In The Little Book of Hygge: Danish Secrets to Happy Living, author Meik Wiking attributes the Danes’ happiness to living out “Hygge,” a word characterized by coziness/hominess/sense of well being. One way that is created is by surrounding oneself with objects from the past that hold emotional significance.

It is with immense pleasure I have tea at Diane’s house. Her Danish ancestry is displayed through plates, paintings of a family house from the old country and more. A small wooden secretary comes to life when she says, “I remember when….”

I’m both a historian and a daydreaming nostalgic. Inside my house, a plant sits in a pickle crock, the old farm door hangs horizontally from my kitchen ceiling, a moose rack looms above my living room and reminds me of tasty roasts my mother prepared; and then there’s a heavy ceramic cup and saucer from my grandmother that came out of an oatmeal box. Outside I see my grandparents’ red farm pump and wagon wheels. I can almost hear them talking in Low German. My heart is warmed.

There’s more.

“When I was growing up, my daddy and I had our differences,” my mom explained. “Farm families needed a lot of kids, preferably boys. I was his ‘boy’ because my folks had three girls before a boy came along. He worked me hard, and I often resented it.”

That was growing up on the Peabody, Kansas, farm. Decades later, after my parents moved to Alaska and homesteaded, my mom’s parents went up to help, taking along a little green wooden ice cream freezer. Mom and grandpa made homemade ice cream.

Mom told me, “That was the freezer we used on the farm.” She smiled. “We’ve made peace. I understand things better as an adult.”

The green freezer now graces my fireplace mantel and is stuffed seasonally with floral décor.

There’s more.

“Why do I keep that?” I ask myself.
My mother-in-law’s pinecone china dinnerware sits high above my head on a kitchen shelf. Every Thanksgiving, I set my table with those plates, bowls and serving pieces. I imagine the repeated stories around past holiday tables; many evoked by my husband and his two brothers as children. Laughter. Teasing. Arguing? The tug of a pant leg from under the table by the largest wiener dog in history? That’s where the peas ended up from the middle brother. Now my children, grand boys, and even a sly dog, gather around a table set with pinecone china.

After my husband died, I kept his cowboy boots and hats.

The loud tap of his boots on the hardwood floor had annoyed me to no end. When I’d say something, he’d look perplexed, as if to say, “Who would want to sleep any later?” Now those boots and hats adorn my house. One hat hangs on a fence picket from my great-great grandfather Abraham Gaede’s farmhouse that was near Ebenfeld, Kansas.

To my delight, my son has artfully tied together past and present: IKEA furniture and a reel-to-reel tape player. Old cameras are displayed on a corner shelf and modern LED lights are suspended over his kitchen bar. He treasures his father’s tools and enjoys a contemporary standing desk. He, too, has warmed his house into a home. He keeps the stories going.

I’ve decorated with history, not just anyone’s, but mine. My lineage of Kansas farm and Alaska homestead hug me and bring me happiness.

Book Review

Antique Blues is the twelfth book in Jane K. Cleland’s critically acclaimed Josie Prescott Antiques Mystery series [St. Martin’s Minotaur]. Josie, an antiques appraiser-turned-amateur sleuth, once blew the whistle on a price-fixing scandal that rocked the high-end antiques auction houses in New York City. She then relocated to the quaint coastal town of Rocky Point, New Hampshire, to start a new life founding her own antiques appraisal and auction business.

Cleland’s fictional debut, the IMBA bestselling and multiple-award nominated Consigned to Death, introduced her resourceful protagonist and was selected by Library Journal as a “core title” for librarians looking to build a cozy collection.

In Antique Blues, Josie is delighted when her friend Mo Shannon asks her to appraise her newly purchased Japanese woodblock print. And she’s thrilled when Mo’s dad asks her to appraise his vintage Martin guitar, alleged to have been played by Robert Johnson, the great American blues artist. The seller of the woodblock print is Mo’s sister Lydia’s boyfriend, Cal Lewis, a charming and handsome professor of art who creeps Josie out—although she can’t quite pinpoint why.

When Josie learns that the gallery where Cal supposedly purchased the print knows nothing about it, her worry meter whirs into high. Arriving at the Shannon home to ask Mo and Cal about the print, Josie finds Mo dead and Cal missing. While her friend, Police Chief Ellis Hunter, searches for the killer, Josie continues to appraise the print, certain that somewhere in its history is the answer to Mo’s murder. Josie discovers facts that make Cal look guilty but, when she learns long-buried secrets about the antiques and the people who cherish them, she discovers that Cal is far from the only suspect.

Antique Blues is a wonderful addition to Jane Cleland’s Josie Prescott series. Readers will delight in spending time in charming Rocky Point as Josie and her fiancé plan their wedding. You’ll feel part of the family as these much-loved characters come together to solve a horrific double murder. Kirkus Reviews says, “Another gift for antiques lovers, full of usable information on treasure hunting and a mystery replete with red herrings.”

Often reviewed as an Antiques Roadshow for mystery fans, Cleland’s series marries antiques lore seamlessly with fair-play mystery puzzles. This book, like all of the books in the series, stands alone, but for series readers, it’s fun to see the evolution of the familiar stable of characters and witness how Josie counts on her good friends, Hank and Angela, the Prescott cats, for wisdom and guidance.

Antique Blues can be purchased from your local bookstore or online. Visit www.jane cleland.com for more information about the series and fun tidbits like Josie’s Dad’s sayings and Josie’s mother’s recipes.

Giveaway Winner from March - April Issue

We have four giveaway winners from our last issue. James & Maggie Blaetz from Mesa and Sandi Nickler of Cave Creek were sent tickets to the Cave Creek Museum Tour held on March 11th.

Shirley Pinczewks from Tempe will be sent a $20 Gift Certificate to be spent at her favorite Antique Register advertiser, Main Street Antique Mall in Mesa. Shirley likes the convenience of this mall’s location to her home. “It’s easy for me to get to Main Street Antique Mall.”

We love to hear from our readers and customers about how they enjoy The Antique Register and use it to hunt for great finds. In this issue, there is a book giveaway and another $20 Gift Certificate giveaway so be sure to enter and tell us where you pick up The Antique Register. Be sure to take a copy with you when you travel around Arizona this summer!

Always Buying!
When Is It Affordable to Buy Back Your Childhood?

by Harry L. Rinker

While nostalgic memory is critical to collecting, it is time focused. In its narrowest sense, it covers the time period between ages six and fourteen—childhood memory. In its broadest sense, it includes the teenage and early adult years. These are the “me, myself and I” memory years. It is these memories more than any other that trigger collecting urges.

Although adults have nostalgic memories about events that occur later in their life, these memories focused on other individuals, primarily partners or spouses, children, grandchildren and friends. The memories are shared memories. They are communal rather than individual. Objects associated with these events produce less intense nostalgic memories—a smile but not a desire to recapture or repossess.

Although not all collectors collect their childhood and/or early adult memories, the vast majority do. If those who collect outside their own lifetime frame look closely, they are likely to discover that some event or comment experienced during their childhood or early adult years caused them to take this tangential collecting path. The event may not have seemed important at the time. A family member sharing a story about a particular object, a collector sharing his/her sense of excitement about a collection, a visit to a museum or a fascination with an earlier period of time discovered in a history class or book are examples of such an event.

[Author’s Aside: Robert Frost’s The Road Not Taken” —“Two roads diverged in a wood, and I— / I took the one less traveled by, / And that has made all the difference”—impacted my approach to collecting.]

A collection reveals intricate details about a collector’s early life. It can reveal the environment and even the decorative style of the home in which he/she was raised, the collector’s likes and dislikes, his/her interdependence or independence and economic social status and aspirations. Collecting is more thought driven than collectors realize.

Youthful and young adult nostalgia is more than just games, puzzles and toys. It is a composite of everything experienced, heard, smelled, seen, owned and more. It is why long-term memory is often the last memory to go when memory fades. Long-term memories, distorted though they may be, are a person’s golden memories. Life was never better or sweeter.

When writing about toy collecting in previous columns, I made the point that toy collectors actually buy back the childhood memories that their parents were too cheap to buy them in the first place. They learned the harsh reality that Santa was not the miscreant. It was their parents that denied them the one toy they wanted more than anything else. That missing toy haunts a person until it is finally possessed.

I now realize this concept applies to more than just toys. It applies to the full childhood/early adulthood experience. The older one gets, the more desire there is to have a physical connection with the past—to possess and hold an object or objects associated with that past.

This column is not about how old one must be to develop a desire to buy back one’s childhood and/or early adulthood. The age differs from individual to individual. Some experience it in their thirties. Some wait until their fifties. The urge disappears in most individuals by their late sixties. I am an exception to this rule. I will be buying back my childhood and that of my parents and grandparents until the day I die.

Provided a person has sufficient funds, he/she can buy back their childhood at any time. Most collectors are thrifty, a polite word for cheap. Affordability is paramount; and there are times when buying back one’s childhood and early adulthood is very expensive.

The balance of this column explores the question of when are a person’s memories affordable should a person desire to acquire the objects associated with them. The column assumes the period childhood is lost, discarded by the parents or owner based on the premise that “there is no longer any use for this stuff.”

The first affordable reacquiring opportunity is when parents get tired of storing their children’s stuff. This usually occurs when a child gets married or becomes the proud owner of an apartment or home with sufficient storage space to “be free for the taking. Again, the problem is that the nostalgia urge still is dormant among most individuals.

Buying back one’s childhood memories in the secondary antiques and collectibles is not affordable for collectors between the ages of 35 and 55. The competition is too strong. Decade collectibles are at their peak. It is the time to sell, not to buy.

The next opportunity, especially if parents did not redecorate, is when they decided to downsize. Once they decide what they will retain for their retirement, anything else is fair game. Most things come with a “free” sign attached. If a child is lucky, some of their childhood treasures (remember, think in broad terms) remain. The tragedy is that parents often fail to check with their children before disposing of things. They assume if their children wanted something, they would have spoken up earlier. When assisting clients to downsize, my first piece of advice is to encourage them to ask their heirs if they have any interest in the objects identified for disposal.

“They do not want it” is the standard response. “Did you ask them?” is my retort. More often than not, the answer is no.

Antiques and collectibles are affordable during a recession. Antiques and collectibles prices declined during the 2008-2009 Great Recession. Even “hot decade” collectibles slipped in value. In 2018, many antiques and collectibles are selling for mid-1980s prices.

The most affordable time to buy back one’s childhood and early adulthood memories is when a collector is 70 or older. Younger collectors have little or no interest in the earlier stuff. The secondary markets are flooded. The value of common and above average objects continues to fall the greater the distance is between the present and initial period of production.

I sold my Hopalong Cassidy collection four years ago. I waited too long. If I had wanted to maximize my return, I should have sold it 25 to 30 years earlier. Today, I can buy the bulk of it back for 20 to 25 cents on the dollar that was realized when I sold it. I lost count of the times I have been tempted to do so.

Let me guess what you are thinking. Why would anyone who is older than 70 and in their right mind want to buy back their childhood and early adult memories? The answer is simple. As each year passes, early memories grow stronger rather than weaker. Surrounding one’s self in the things that are most loved makes sense. A person cannot take their money to the grave. They can take their love. There is nothing wrong with a person spending money on the things that provide him/her with the greatest pleasure, as opposed to passing it on to the next generation.

After a brief hiatus in my early 70s, I have once again heeded the call to collect, or in my case, to accumulate. My 2018 New Year’s resolution was not “I will catalog the material I own and get it ready for sale.” Instead, I resolved to make a list of the things I want to own before I die and start acquiring them. Many will be objects from my childhood and early adult memories. Others will rekindle memories of my collecting past, especially objects I did not buy because I could not afford them. The newly acquired cylinder and disk music boxes are fantastic.

Some weeks ago, the old house was there as it had always been. On the property, however, was the signature of doom—a development sign. So I hurried over to save this building the only way I can, through a photograph.

The land we live on, ground that I know as well as my own hands, was once a pasture for a farm. A creek winds its way through our neighborhood and, as children, my friends and I followed its banks. As a teenager, when it had snowed, I would wander, studying the almost unbroken blanket. I pondered the little things lost to time.

Little things seem so much a part of everyday that soon we barely notice them. It is all too simple to forget that everything changes, one day at a time.

The old house that initiated these thoughts was struggling and long-empty. The roof was a step from caving in and the columns leaned dangerously. I understood that a tearing down was inevitable. The little house was an anomaly in between commercial buildings and beside a four lane road. It belonged in another time upon a tract of land yet untouched by a more hectic way of life.

I was lowering my camera when the shadows shifted and the house seemed to smile at me. It was in how the stone steps beckoned and in the gentling slope of the land. I smiled back and wondered once more.

Who slammed the screen door again and again on a summer’s day? Who was called to dinner from those front steps? What color and pattern was the apron that surely hung on a hook by the stove or the sweater that was worn to ward off the chill of an autumn evening? What kind of pies cooled upon the table? How hot was the kitchen on a humid day of canning a harvest? In winter, did the crackle of a warm fireplace fill the room?

Those are the little things to ponder. Then there are the pivotal things. Were the people who lived there happy? Were they kind and loving to one another? Who was born there? Who died there? What were their greatest joys and their deepest heartaches? Did they, too, lose the little things in the course of everyday life?

You know the rest of the story, of course. The next time I had reason to drive by, the smooth red clay seemed to spread to the next county.

Yet, for a moment, I saw a blue gingham apron on a hook and a grey sweater waiting to serve. A sweat broke to the scent of bubbling peaches as a pie cooled by the open window.

Before I blink three times, an up-to-date complex will fill this space. Inside, computers will hum in rhythm with the tapping of keys. Like the house, it will serve its purpose upon this land. It will have its own little things. What texture will the sweaters be when the air conditioning is too cold? Who will always end up making the coffee? What leftovers will people bring for lunch? What family members will smile through the forever window of a framed photograph?

We cannot, of course, remember everything, but sometimes I purposely go to the back porch. I contemplate the abundance of branches on the sycamore tree and how shadows shimmer across the flower patch.

Sometimes if the sun is just so, all of the little things, past and present, smile at me. And I smile back.

The Thrill of the Hunt

by Deb Heatherly

Warmer days have finally arrived and many will take to the road on vacations to various locations. Whether it’s trips to the mountains, the beach or to visit friends and relatives, if you’re like me, they are an excuse to explore interesting places along the way.

I’m always on the look out for quilt shops, antique stores and businesses that repurpose older items into new uses. My daughter once described it as an adult treasure hunt and I think she is right. I love the thrill of finding things to bring home, as well as the unexpected memories triggered by spying something from my past.

Many times, it’s a game or a toy that brings back special memories. I vividly remember sitting and playing Chinese Checkers with my cousins on summer nights after a long day at the beach. I had a round metal set that opened so that you could store the marbles inside. When I recently ran across a similar set, I felt myself smiling. I swear I could almost hear my cousins laughing and smell the Coppertone my mom would slather on my sunburnt shoulders.

Sometimes it’s the excitement of finding new additions for a collection or seeing a friend do the same. My friend Cacia is constantly on the lookout for lavender transfer ware and it was exciting for us both when she found a piece on a recent trip. She had explained to me earlier that the pieces she looks for are getting harder and harder to find. She loves to use the pretty plates on special occasions and now, even though it’s not something I collect, I find myself searching for pieces for her.

Plates, games, dolls—almost anything vintage appeals to me—but my favorite things to look for are vintage sewing machines and sewing collectibles. I love to imagine the people who used them and what they created. Was it a grandmother who was teaching her granddaughter to sew her first seams? Was it an expectant mom making tiny layettes for the baby that was soon to enter the world? Or was it a quilter like myself piecing scraps together to create quilts to keep her family warm? Pin cushions, darning eggs, needle cases—no matter what it is—each piece holds a childlike wonder to me and I will have to admit that many of those finds end up following me home.

One of my all-time favorites is a red metal thread holder. Its paint is peeling in places and its center pincushion was lost long...

Prescott’s ‘Antiques on the Square’ Has New Name, Location for June Show & Market

‘Antiques on the Square’—the popular event held semi-annually on the downtown Prescott Courthouse Plaza—has a new name and a new larger venue. It is now the Prescott Antique Show and Vintage Market and its upcoming event will be held at the historic Prescott Rodeo Grounds on Sunday, June 3.

Just five minutes from downtown Prescott and the Courthouse Plaza, the spacious venue at 840 Rodeo Drive offers both indoor and outdoor exhibit spaces, ample parking in close proximity to exhibits and a vintage setting that ties perfectly to the theme of the show!

The new venue and name has generated much enthusiasm from local and state vendors and the general public. Sales for vendor spaces have been brisk and some exhibitor areas are already sold out for what is going to be a bigger and better event! The increased space at the Rodeo Grounds allows for sales of larger “mid-century” architectural and repurposed salvage items along with the Antiques and Collectibles—and more. Hours are from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m.; admission is $3 with children admitted free; and parking is free.

The well-known antique show, dating to the late 1980s, is sponsored by the Thumb Butte and Yavapai Questers. An international non-profit organization with four Prescott area before this treasure came to live with me but I love it all the same. I’d like to know its history and how it ended up in a secondhand store. I’m sure it was once a prized piece for some lucky seamstress and I think this little beauty deserves a much better retirement than the shelf of miscellaneous goods that I found it abandoned on. It looked very out of place sitting between plastic flowers and a chipped cup and saucer. If inanimate objects had feelings, I’d almost say it was sad. That’s why I just had to bring it home. It now sits in a place of honor in my sewing room.

While any sewing themed item makes me happy, I will have to admit that by far my biggest weakness is old metal toy sewing machines. I collect the tiny machines, the boxes they came in and even advertisements about toy sewing machines. I’ve almost run out of places for my hubby to put up shelves to hold them but that does not stop the search.

I blame this obsession on my upbringing and it happened like this. You see, I learned to sew at a very young age on my mother’s Kenmore. She was a very accomplished seamstress and after seeing my serious interest, she bought me a ‘real’ machine of my very own. I fondly remember making my clothes and, by the age of ten, proudly wearing my self-made fashions to school. I loved that machine and it was one of my most prized possessions but I’ve often wondered if my never having a toy machine is what fuels my fascination with these little cuties. I like to tell my mother that my addiction to them is all her fault. She then reminds me that I would never have been able to make the things I made on a toy.

I’ll close by quoting the old saying, “Don’t judge a book by its cover.” Sometimes the most out of the way places yield the most fun rewards. My advice to you is to be on the lookout for adventure. You never know what you will find. And, hey, if you spot a lonely toy machine, give me a shout. I know where it can find a good home.

chapters, the Questers are focused on the preservation and restoration of antiquities, historic buildings and historic sites.

Local and area organizations benefitting from antique show profits over the years include several museums and historical societies: Sharlot Hall, Smoki, Skull Valley, Chino Valley, and Dewey-Humboldt. Just in the last three years, many thousands of dollars have been given for restoration projects that include the Porter steam engine at the entrance to Sharlot’s Depot, the historic Cornville Post Office, Santa Fe Railroad phone booths used at Jerome Junction and Del Rio, a mining stamp mill, Citizens Cemetery, and new kitchen flooring at the historic Fort Verde Hance House. Recently, a $7600 check (from antique show profits and a grant from the Arizona State Organization of Questers) was presented to the City of Prescott to fund the restoration of windows and repair and/or replication of the steel security bars in the windows of the historic Grace Sparks Community Center, also known as “the Armory.”

Members of Questers meet monthly in their local chapters to share their antiques, collectibles and love of history. Programs consist of study papers on collections or special interests, guest speakers, or field trips. Fundraisers to benefit preservation and restoration projects are held periodically. Questers never leave a meeting without learning something interesting. Most important, though, is sharing a collection of lifetime friendships and interests.

For information about the Prescott Antique Show and Vintage Market, contact Arlene Bright, Chairman, at 928-443-1862 or email harveyseeker@cableone.net. The show has a new website at https://www.prescottantiqueshow.com, a Facebook page and can soon be seen on a new Instagram account.

Wanting to Visit Washington State?
‘Love of Junk’ in Walla Walla Gives You One More Reason!
by Barbara Floyd

There are endless reasons to visit Washington State as it is beautiful from the coastal areas to the mountains, farmlands and high deserts. And Walla Walla in Southeastern WA is one of the locales that has become a major well-known and popular destination.

Whoever thought this small city would rise to its current level of popularity? Ask the visitors who flood this area and you will hear various reasons including Walla Walla’s fame as a wine producing region because of rich farmland and the right weather that produces wonderful grapes. Walla Walla is home to over 140 wineries and tasting rooms hosting several large annual wine-tasting festivals. I was told by a nearby lavender farmer that the climate in this valley is most like France and that is why lavender flourishsa long with the grape harvests.

With wine come great restaurants and delicious menus. Walla Walla is a city rich with the history of the Oregon Trail, farmers’ markets and farms selling organic fruits and vegetables with an abundance of fresh asparagus, apples, pears, berries and Sweet Walla Walla onions. There are a growing number of specialty shops in quaint and picturesque Historic Downtown as well as three colleges, the arts, music and the Walla Walla Museum. The fact that Walla Walla has often been named a top place for retirees draws even more people.

Sitting in the midst of all of this is the Swenson Farm owned by Doug and Brenda Swenson. Brenda is the eldest of my four children. The Farm is surrounded by the wineries but I don’t think their thirty-foot grape vine will ever get them into the business especially since their dog usually finds the clusters of small sweet grapes and devours them before we realize they are there.

I spent the summer on this farm after ‘semi-retiring’ six years ago from actively publishing of The Antique Register, now in its 20th year, and The Country Register, which I founded in Arizona nearly 30 years ago. Doug and Brenda were trying to formulate a sustainable income from their land. Although it was not big enough to make a living off of farming, at the same time it was big enough that it had to be productive.

Lots of ideas were tossed around. My vision and suggestion was creating a vintage event with good food that would take advantage of the great views of the Blue Mountains, lots of green grass, the large metal building and red barn along with plenty of parking and even a camping area. The Farm was the ‘perfect storm’ for a successful event. My Mid-Century loving daughter was, at that time, living in a hundred-year-old home and she loved the event idea and recruited my services to put it together.

That is how Love of Junk, Walla Walla’s Vintage Market, became a reality. (So much for being semi-retired as I continue to pull this event together from my Phoenix home in the winter and then go to Walla Walla at the end of each May. Can you tell I just hate doing this?)

The sixth annual Love of Junk will be held on Friday and Saturday, June 15 and 16. There will be over 70 outstanding vintage vendors, the best of food trucks, live music and lots of happy people coming to the farm. It is held from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. on Friday and 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. on Saturday. We can guarantee you a fun time, but we can’t guarantee the weather—which hasn’t stopped the crowds yet since a little rain doesn’t hurt ‘junk!’ Vendors are prepared for any weather and the customers come ready to enjoy whatever the day brings.

The Antique Register is a marvelous way to advertise our event and our success at reaching interested readers should inspire other organizers of vintage events as well as shops to advertise. It is my belief that Vintage shops are the new “country” farm-style gift boutiques and home décor stores for today’s popular trends. They are home to many sought after styles, including antiques, chalk painted furniture and wonderful accessories that make our homes fun, cozy, classy and personal. Advertising in The Antique Register brings new customers into these shops. The editions are online and the publications are free gifts from all advertising shops and events. Find The Antique Register at www.theantiqueregister.com. For the list of Country Register publishers in Arizona and across the U.S. and Canada visit www.countryregister.com.
